You’ve recently heard about InCommon’s plan for international interfederation, but that is not the only change in the works for 2016. Pilots involving K-12 involvement are expected to move to production. And InCommon will explore the potential for new services and support options, given the changing demographics of InCommon participants.

Join us for this IAM Online to hear about how InCommon is changing and how that might affect you and your organization. Topics will include:

- The changing mix of InCommon participants
- InCommon Goes Global - how interfederation expands opportunities for participants
- Incorporating K-12 - working with state research and education networks to broaden federation and trust opportunities
- Plans for the future - using the data and the reports of recent working groups to plot the course for InCommon services and support
